Do Over

by Nightcrawler247

Summary

After The Fall, Hannibal wakes in a world where he and Will are happily married.

Content with this life, Hannibal tries giving up cannibalism so he doesn't lose Will again.

That... is easier said then done.

When Will leaned forward and pushed them both down Hannibal knew he could have resisted.

It would have taken very little. No strength at all, even in his exhaustion, to push them both back agianst such a weak force. He just... he didn't want to.

It felt right. It fit fitting for them. That it might end like this. Poetic in a way. Him finally getting Will to see the beauty of what they could be and Will embracing it fully before rejecting even the idea of that life. Ensuring he could never go back on that decision. Hannibal accepted that. He could accepted that whole heartedly and completely. It really was the perfect end their story.

So you could imagine the way he felt and saw a completely new story laid out before him.
